

CITATION STYLE GUIDE

The following examples were formatted using Endnote software. They are in the style proposed in A Manual for Writers of Term Papers, Theses, and Dissertations, by Kate L. Turabian, sixth edition, revised by John Grossman and Alice Bennett, 1996. A copy of the Manual is available at the Reference Desk for further consultation, as are the manuals for several other styles. You may want to ask your professor which style is preferred.

- Note the differences between the format for a footnote and the format for a bibliography entry.
- The first footnote citation to an item should be a full reference, but later citations to the same item may be shortened in the style shown at the end of this guide.
- If you are using parenthetical citations instead of footnotes, the list of works cited is called the reference list, and the entries are in a different format, as indicated below.
- A sample Bibliography and a short Reference List appear at the end of this guide.

Article found in an electronic database

Note: When to cite an electronic source, from The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation:

If a database contains documents published and available separately, it is not necessary to indicate that they are also available in database form unless the documents in original form are difficult to obtain. Thus, most newspapers, corporate or government reports, and statutory or legislative materials may be cited in their original form even if they are found by means of a database search. Wire service and other materials that are unavailable in printed form or are difficult to obtain in the original, however, may be cited as “available in” a database.

Most articles found in electronic databases do not indicate the original page numbers within the electronic text. If you are footnoting the article and would normally supply a page number (as for a quotation), you may want to cite the database in which you found the article, to make clear the reason for lack of a page citation, and to facilitate location of the passage by the reader.
